N.Y. is first state to OK a 'fliers' bill of rights'

ALBANY, N.Y. — Three hours on a plane queued up for takeoff might not sound like fun to would-be travelers, but it's the magic number for benefits of New York's new passengers' bill of rights law to kick in.

It's also less than one-third of the time people spent in frustration and anger on a JetBlue Airways plane at John F. Kennedy Airport's tarmac during the now-infamous St. Valentine's Day ice storm, one of several incidents that prompted New York lawmakers to take action. Passengers were hungry and thirsty, toilets were overflowing, and the plane didn't have proper ventilation.

New York is the first state to respond with legislation, signed this week by Gov. Eliot Spitzer.

"The bottom line is people that are stuck on a plane for more than three hours should be able to use a bathroom, should be able to breathe fresh air and should be able to get a drink of water," said Assemblyman Michael Gianaris, D-Queens.

We are committed to solutions for promoting airline passenger policies that forward first and foremost the safety of all passengers while not imposing unrealistic economic burdens that adversely affect airline profitability or create exorbitant ticket price increases. For more on the situation, including upcoming airline executive bonuses, visit www.alliedpilots.org Here also is a link from this organization with specific references to the flights and conditions that started all of this: <http://www.alliedpilots.org/Public/publicrelation>

Каб прачытаць гэтае паведамленьне, патрэбна 3 хвіліны. Прачытай яго...

Часам мы ня хочам удзельнічаць у масавых акцыях толькі таму, што ня ўпэўненыя, ці зьбярацца дастатковая колькасць людзей.

Зараз ёсьць магчымасьць з вялікай дакладнасьцю ведаць, колькі нас будзе на сьвяткаваньні Дня Волі. Дзеля гэтага трэба толькі п 25 сакавіка 2007 года ў Менску, але толькі калі яшчэ 10000 чалавек зробіць тое ж самае".

У мінулым годзе TUT.BY праводзіў такое апытаньне на 1-й старонцы партала. У гэтым годзе чакаць на паўтор не выпадае. Але ў час - падпішыся зараз!
